Dose calibrator Dose calibrator is a key component in the production of radiation dose calibrator. Purpose The dose calibrator is used in the measurement of ionizing radiation dose. A dose calibrator provides a method of measuring the response of an ionization chamber to dose and then using this information to determine the response of a source of radiation with dose. It is used for non-destructive testing of radiation-sensitive components in electron and proton accelerators as well as in X-ray devices, for calibration of irradiation dose of various types of low-energy ion beams. Two methods are typically used in dose calibrator: Constant ionizing radiations (similar to chemical dosimetry) Source isotopes

In the first method, doses of constant radiation are measured. When keeping constant the type of radiation, the constant value of dose is measured. However, the use of this method in dose calibrator is limited by some inherent problems, such as the absence of linearity in the output of the dose calibrator. Other methods, which are widely used, measure dose of isotope radiation in the form of the signal of a radioactive source. According to this method, dose of radiation in a dose calibrator is equal to the dose of equivalent radiation in the source. The use of this method in dose calibrator results in a more linear dependence of the dose output from the dose calibrator, which takes into account possible inaccuracies in the measurement process. Each type of ion beams dose calibrator can have different specific parameters. A dose calibrator should be thoroughly checked by dose calibrator manufacturer's documentation.

Parts General The main components of a dose calibrator include: Scintillator ion chamber Time-to-digital converter
Power supply Scintillator
